Ice hockey is a dynamic sport so you'll need both dynamic and static stretching. Dynamic stretches form part of your pre-game or pre-practice warm-up. Static stretches can be included at the end of your cool down or at other times to improve your overall fitness. Pre-game/ pre-practice: General warm up (5-10 minutes).

Stretching and Warm-up Guide For Hockey

The warm up should start off at a low intensity, with a gradual progression from general and simple movements to more hockey specific and higher intensity actions. Here is an example of what can be done, but the specifics can be adjusted to suit constraints such as limited space and time, and the conditions. 2 laps of the field at a slow run (include running sideways/backwards, lifting knees up and kicking heels backward).
